EPA Reg. No.	71995-23

History and Notes:	Caller states, one month ago, he used a small spray bottle of premixed Roundup, purchased at Lowes, to spray his driveway. Some of the liquid sprayed on his hands, when he was turning the nozzle, getting on his left hand and a little on his right hand (little and ring finger). He washed it off immediately. About 3 days later, he developed a rash that is spreading. It is on both of his hands. It is red, and is working its way down to nerves and fingertips". He had redness near his fingernail, which he started putting Vaseline on and it spread to his knuckle. He states it is eating away his skin. He has redness at the base of his fingers now so he went to the urgent care because he got scared. He does other landscaping, but this is first time ever using Roundup. He does not have any specifics on product or bottle. MRPC discussed the product toxicity. The symptoms do not correlate with the expected response to the product. MRPC offered to speak to the urgent care regarding information on Roundup if desired. MRPC advised the man should be evaluated for other causes.
